

Contents

Preface: On Novelty	vii
Acknowledgements	xii
Living in Times of Unprecedented Change: A Prologue	1
Postwar historical sensibility	1
The prospect of unprecedented change	7
The unprecedented in retrospect: A dissociative relation to the past	11
The inadequacy of narrative philosophy of history	16
(No more) narrative domestication of the new	20
What about narrative in times of the unprecedented?	23
The outline of the book	27
Part One On Historical Change	33
1 A Quasi-Substantive Philosophy of History	39
Talking quasi	39
Substantive days and quasi-times	41
History moves again	46
The return of the future	50
History as a disrupted singular	55
The lingering threat of substantive thinking	57
2 The Dissociated Past	61
Whose past?	61
Neither the practical nor the historical past	63
Not even the presence of the past	69
Our apophatic past	74
Essentially contested historical knowledge	76
3 The Unprecedented Future	79
History and the future	79
The triad of cataclysm	80
Utopian thought	88
Posthistorical dystopia and negative utopia	93

Posthistorical dystopia and eschatology	97
The temporality of the singular event	101
Part Two On Historiographical Change	105
4 The Expression of Historical Experience	109
Blasphemous rumours	109
The unnameable expression	112
Our everyday notion of expression	114
Naming experience as the expressed	115
The expression of historical experience	119
How the trick is done	123
5 Encountering the World	127
What about truth and falsity?	127
A phenomenology of historical studies	132
Encountering the world, encountering the past (Realist irrealism, irrealist realism)	134
Doesn't look like anything to me	138
The aesthetic moment	139
From non-sense to sense	143
6 The Step toward Historical Sense-Making	146
On the difference between experience and experientiality	151
The approval of a demand	151
The approval of a demand of the future about the past	159
Making sense of non-sense historically	161
Historical and historiographical change	164
A summary	167
The Unprecedented and the Crisis of the Political: An Epilogue	169
An eventual historical sensibility	173
The emancipation dilemma and political change	173
The unprecedented and the crisis of the political	175
The future of the political	179
Is this still history?	183
Bibliography	188
Index	191
	203